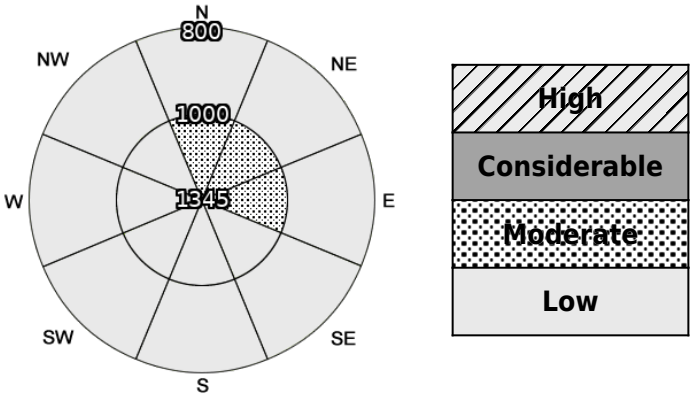
Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

The existing snowpack will remain hard icy and stable. There will be some fresh deposits of windslab above 1000 metres, mainly at the top of gullies and around coire rims. North to East aspects will be most affected. Although not extensive, these fresh deposits will be poorly bonded. The avalanche hazard will be Moderate.



Forecast Weather Influences

The freezing level will be around 300 metres. Snow showers are expected later in the night and during the day. Fresh South-Westerly winds will veer to the West late in the day.

Comments

If less snow than expected falls during the forecast period, the hazard may well remain Low throughout.
