

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOW

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Tuesday 08/03/2022

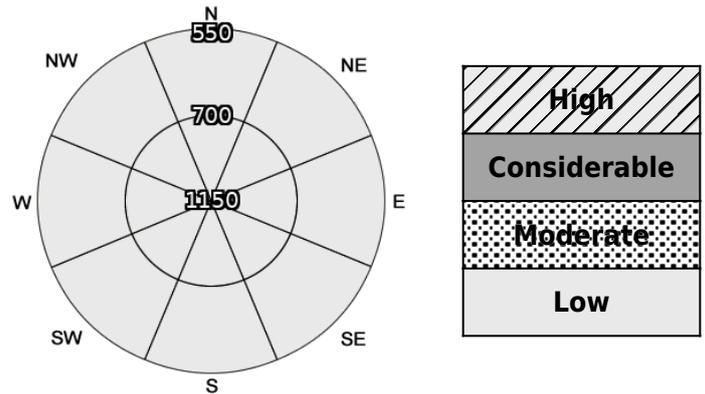

Avalanche Problems

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

The snowpack will remain well bonded and stable. A firm and very icy surface on many slopes will persist. Surface instabilities may exist on slopes affected by solar radiation, these should mainly be shallow and avoidable. Cornices will be suspect. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

It will remain dry for the period with strong South-Easterly winds which will strengthen to gale or severe gale later in the day. The freezing level overnight will be 250 metres rising to 750 metres through the day.

Comments

The snowpack is very firm and icy in many locations. High potential exists for serious consequences in the event of an uncontrolled slip or fall.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.