Lochaber

Avalanche Hazard Forecast

Issued 12/01/2023

FOR PERIOD 18:00HRS Thu 12/01/2023 TO 18:00HRS Fri 13/01/2023

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Friday 13/01/2023

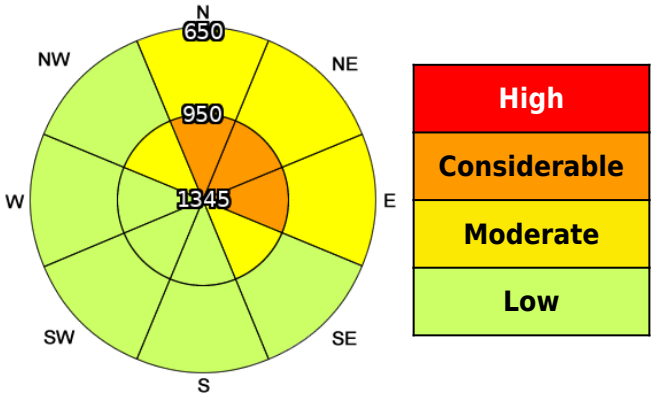
Avalanche Problems

Wind Slab

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

This evening (Thursday) further deposits of unstable windslab will accumulate in wind sheltered locations above 950 metres. Gully tops, and scarp slopes on North through to East aspects will be most affected. Unstable cornices will continue to form above these aspects. Wind scoured slopes will remain firm, icy and stable. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable.



Forecast Weather Influences

Heavy showers, of snow, above 900 metres will die out this evening. It will be mainly dry with occasional light snow above 800 metres during the day. Freezing level will lower from 950 metres to 750 metres. During this evening Gale force Southerly winds will decrease to Moderate. During the day winds will remain moderate and back from North-Westerly to South-Westerly by the end of the period.

Comments

A calmer day is expected Friday, with lighter winds.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.