

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOW

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Friday 07/04/2023

Avalanche Problems

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

The old snowpack will remain generally stable on all aspects and at all levels. Its surface will be hard after an overnight refreeze, softening during the day where exposed to direct sunshine. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

Overnight, moderate North-Westerly winds will ease and veer to very light Easterly, and then during the day increase again and veer South-South-Easterly. It is expected to be dry throughout the period. The freezing level will be 800 metres overnight, rising during the day to around 1200 metres.

Comments

Greatest snow accumulations lie on North to East aspects above 950m.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.