

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOW

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Sunday 02/02/2025

Avalanche Problems

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

The snowpack will continue to diminish in the warm overnight temperatures then a new dusting of snow on the summits as it cools. Refreezing during the day especially above 800 metres or so. The snowpack will be stable and firm throughout. Greatest amounts on East to South-East aspects above 700 metres. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

Gale to storm force Southerly winds overnight, lessening to strong South-Westerly during the day. Freezing level above the summits overnight, lowering during the day to around 900 metres or so. Precipitation falling as rain at all levels overnight turning to sleet and snow on the summits from daybreak.

Comments

An increasingly warm wind on the tops with the firm snowpack gradually diminishing.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.