

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Friday 23/12/2011

Avalanche Problems

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Near surface instabilities will persist while temperatures remain warm on North-East through East to South-East aspects where avalanches are likely. Additionally, small pockets of poorly bonded wind slab will develop on these same aspects above 750 metres. Cornices remain unstable. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable

Forecast Weather Influences

Temperatures will drop in the forecast period and rain will change to snow later in the night. Winds will be from the West-South-West tonight veering to West-North-West in the day. The freezing level will lower from 2500 m to 500m in the day.

Comments

Recovery cooling in the forecast.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.