

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE MODERATE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Wednesday 28/12/2011

Avalanche Problems

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Precipitation initially falling as rain then snow will gradually form moderately well bonded windslab accumulations into lee and sheltered locations mainly above 900 metres on North to Easterly aspects. Elsewhere deposits will be onto mainly bare ground and will be generally stable. The avalanche hazard will be Moderate

Forecast Weather Influences

Precipitation overnight will initially fall as rain, as the freezing level gradually lowers through the night and during the day this will turn to snow. Winds will be very strong South-West to Westerly. Freezing level will fall from 1500 metres to 700 metres.

Comments

Some snow and wintry conditions expected.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.