

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Friday 14/12/2012

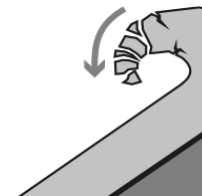

Avalanche Problems

Wind Slab

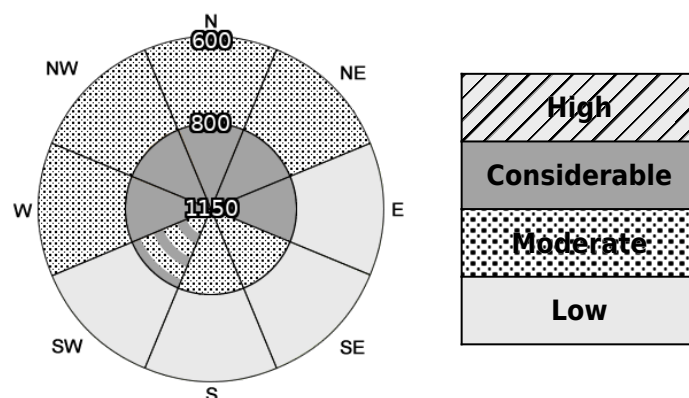

Persistent Weak Layers

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Strong winds and drifting snow will lead to new unstable accumulations developing in sheltered locations on South-Westerly through North to Easterly aspects above 800 metres, these deposits will become increasingly unstable and avalanches are likely, other aspects will be affected due to cross loading. Newly formed cornices will also be unstable. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable

Forecast Weather Influences

Remaining cold in the mountains but strengthening South-Easterly winds will become storm force with heavy snow showers throughout the day. Freezing level 500 metres

Comments

Winds and snow showers will increase during the day. The freezing level will lift slightly to -1 at 500 metres.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.