

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Sunday 17/03/2013

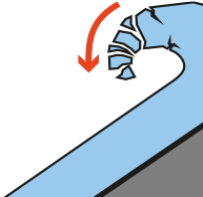

Avalanche Problems

Wind Slab

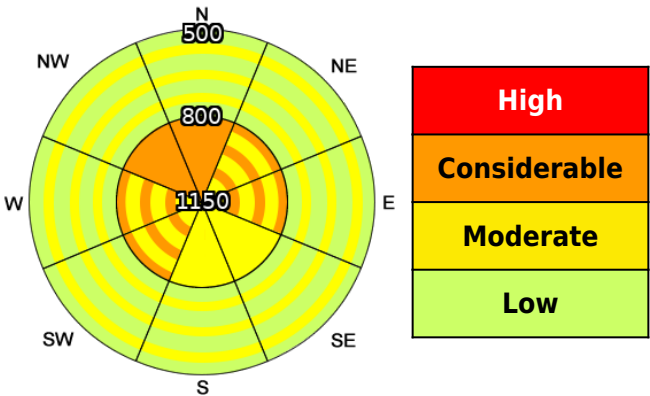

Persistent Weak Layers

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Poorly bonded windslab will remain on North-West through North to East aspects above 800 metres. New, unstable windslab will develop and form on South through West to North-West mainly above 800 metres. Cornices will remain fragile and prone to collapse. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable.

Forecast Weather Influences

Overnight, snow showers with strong North-North-Easterly winds these will ease and veer becoming East-South-Easterly, the freezing level will be around 400 metres. During the day, light snow showers with fresh East-South-Easterly winds the freezing level rising to 600 metres.

Comments

New snow amounts are not certain and new deposits may well be shallow. Summit temperatures minus three degrees Celsius.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.