

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Sunday 10/01/2016

Avalanche Problems

Wind Slab

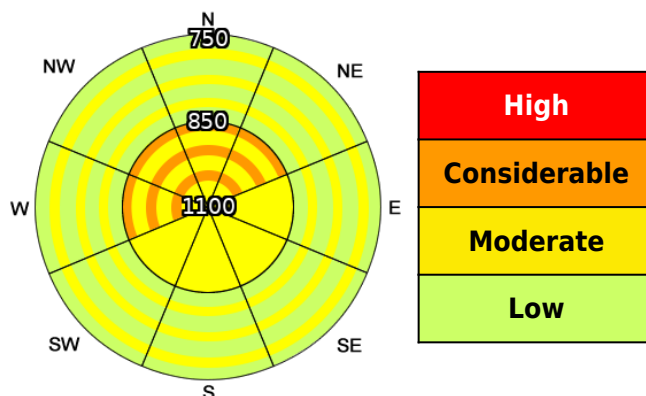

Persistent Weak Layers

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Soft and marginally stabilised new windslab will form on steep and very sheltered lee slopes of all aspects above 850m. Most affected locations will be very steep West through North to North-East facing gully tops and steeper coire backwalls above 900m. Good stability on all exposed ridges. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable

Forecast Weather Influences

Remaining cold with snow showers throughout the period. Winds will be moderate, easing to light Easterly overnight, then backing Northerly through to Southerly by late afternoon.

Comments

Low confidence in forecasted snow amounts. Check up to date sources in the morning and adjust mountain travel plans accordingly.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.