

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLE

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Saturday 05/03/2016

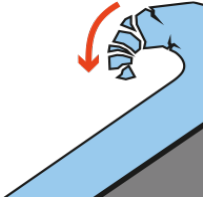

Avalanche Problems

Wind Slab

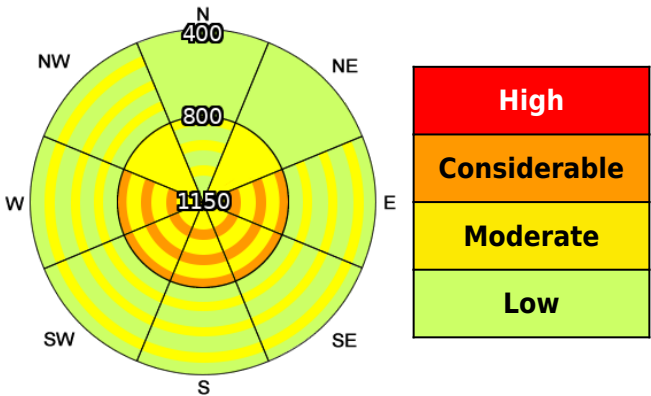

Persistent Weak Layers

Cornices

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Redistributed snow will continue to build windslab instabilities on South-East through South to South - West aspects above 800 metres. Localised instabilities will persist on West through North to East aspects especially above 800 metres. Cornices will continue to build. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable.

Forecast Weather Influences

Strong winds will be North-North-Easterly at first backing North throughout the night and becoming fresh North - North-East to North tomorrow. The freezing level will lower to around 400 metres then rise slightly to hover around 500 metres tomorrow. Light snow showers early evening then dry for the rest of the period.

Comments

Remaining cold with a cold North to North-Easterly airflow.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.