

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOWAvalanche Hazard Forecast for Friday 03/02/2017*Avalanche Problems*Wind Slab*Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

New deposits of shallow windslab will form on North-West to North-East aspects in steep, sheltered locations above 950 metres. Accumulations are expected to be small. Elsewhere the older patchy snow, which is mainly found on North-East through East to South aspects above 900 metres will become firm and remain stable. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

Overnight it will continue mild with rain at all levels but by early morning it will become cooler with light new snow around the summits. Winds will be very strong, South-South-East overnight and South to South-South-West during the day.

CommentsView the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.