

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOWAvalanche Hazard Forecast for Sunday 02/04/2017*Avalanche Problems*Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Cooler conditions overnight will result in a firmer snowpack by morning with well bonded and stable conditions on all aspects. The snow will gradually start to soften throughout the day. Greatest amounts of snow will be found in North to East facing Corries above 950 metres. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

Overnight the sky will clear and the freezing level will drop to around 1000 metres. Winds, initially light from the West will become moderate South-Westerlies by the end of the afternoon.

Comments

Remaining snow will become very firm with serious run out's onto rocks.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.