

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE CONSIDERABLEAvalanche Hazard Forecast for Tuesday 16/01/2018*Avalanche Problems*Wind Slab*Persistent Weak Layers*Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Snowfall and persistent drifting will form unstable windslab in sheltered locations on North-West through North to East aspects. In steeper locations above 900 metres deposits will be poor to weakly bonded. Gully exits, steep burn lines and corrie rims are most likely to be affected. Small cornices will start to form. The avalanche hazard will be Considerable.

Forecast Weather Influences

Snow showers overnight developing into light snowfall during the day. Generally fresh West-South-Westerly winds becoming strong for a few hours during the early afternoon. 400 metre freezing level overnight lowering to 200 metres during the day.

Comments

Much firmer conditions underfoot today. Difficult mountain conditions likely at times on Tuesday.

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.