

THE AVALANCHE HAZARD WILL BE LOW

Avalanche Hazard Forecast for Wednesday 17/03/2021

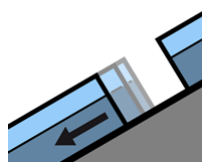

Avalanche Problems

Wet Snow

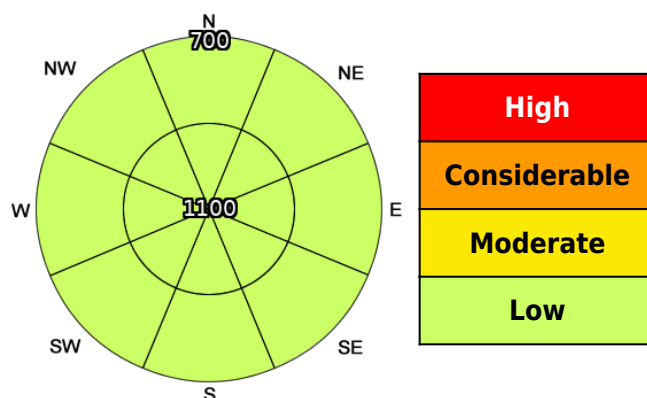

Cornices

Gliding Snow

Forecast Snow Stability & Avalanche Hazard

Good stability in most locations. The snowpack will become firmer or crusty in many places overnight then moisten later as temperatures rise. Some limited, minor wet snow instability is possible on very steep N through E to SE aspects later in the afternoon. All cornices, some large, will be collapse prone especially later in the day. Ice and rock fall will be objective dangers during thaw conditions. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Forecast Weather Influences

No precipitation is forecast. Clear skies and cooler surface temperatures overnight then milder at all elevations during the day. Moderate W winds easing to light NW by afternoon.

Comments

View the latest avalanche report

Scan the QR code to view the full Avalanche Hazard Report on the SAIS website.