Forecast Weather Influences

A dry day with the freezing levels lifting to above the summits. Winds will be strong, mostly North-West.

Forecast Snow Stability and Avalanche Hazard

Some softening of the patchy snow cover is likely later in the day otherwise the snow will remain firm and well bonded. Greatest amounts will mostly be found in high North to East corries. The avalanche hazard will be Low.

Observed Avalanche Hazard - Thu 20/01/2022

Observed Weather Influences

A very light dusting of snow above 900 metres overnight but dry thereafter. The winds were strong from the North-North-West.

Observed Snow Stability and Avalanche Hazard

The older patchy snow is very firm, well bonded and stable. Any new snow was cosmetic and inconsequential. Very little snow remains below 800 metres with larger areas present above 900 metres in the steep North and East facing corries of the highest mountains. The avalanche hazard is Low.

Mountain Conditions

Observed Mountain Travel Conditions

Firm snow - ice on some aspects. Cloudy on the tops with some bright spells. Winds 20-30 mph progress difficult at times with stronger gusts.

Comments

Remaining snow-ice is very firm with short run outs. Slips and trips likely to have serious consequences.
